Division Focus

A Look at How the Department Protects and Serves Alabama Farmers and Consumers

Making Government More Responsive to Alabamians

Stacy Boshell, Weights and Measures Division director, using a standard prover to assure proper measurement of fuel at a pump.

Nothing is more important in business and in government than doing your best.

If you fall short, people, whether they are business customers or those served by government inspectors, will know that you are just not getting the job done.

That is what can frustrate some people when they come into contact with government at just about any level, local, state and federal.

Lawrence County farmer Brian Glenn (left) talks to Ceil Sikes, headmaster of Pike Liberal Arts School in Troy, and Ulanda Washington, of South Dale Middle School in Pinckard, who were among the 76 educators who toured his farm and other locations in northeast Alabama as part of the Alabama Ag in the Classroom Summer Institute in 2011. The deadline to apply for this year's summer institute is April 15.

APPLICATIONS SOUGHT FOR AG IN THE CLASSROOM

By Mary Johnson

April 15 is the last day to submit an application for this year's Alabama Ag in the Classroom (AITC) Summer Institute, a grassroots program that teaches educators about agriculture and introduces them to new strategies for incorporating agriculture into their classrooms. Eligible applicants include K-6 teachers, media specialists and administrators.

The 2012 program will be at the Marriott Grand National in Opelika, June 12-14. Tuition to the institute is free and teachers can receive continuing education credits for the workshop.

Attendees get their hands dirty with agricultural activities and field trips to working farms. They also receive take-home educational materials and teaching strategies to incorporate agricultural education into their classrooms and schools. Activity skills used include language arts, science, social studies and mathematics.

"It's very important to expose children to agriculture in the classroom because nowadays many children never learn about rural life or the importance of farming," said AITC Chairman Kim Earwood, who also serves as director of the Alabama Farmers Federation Women's Leadership Division.

Past participants say the workshop is one of the best they have ever attended. Lydia Davis, a second grade teacher at Indian Valley Elementary School in Sylacauga, said, "Going to the Technology in the workplace changes almost daily. That is a good thing. But, if you know much about how government moves at a snail’s pace—sometimes for good reason—you know that applications in technology often come first to business and later to government.

Such is the case in the Alabama Department of Agriculture & Industries as there has been a concerted effort the past year to lay the groundwork for comprehensive upgrading of how our inspectors and others conduct their work.

You may have noted in recent years that meter readers for electric and natural gas utility companies no longer record your home’s energy usage by looking at the meter and writing it down on a form. They utilize technology with bar-code scanners and other means to get the job done more accurately and much more efficiently.

Time is money, in more ways than one. In these times of dwindling government budgets, especially in Alabama state government, we are under great pressure to improve the productivity and accuracy of our inspectors.

One of the first divisions where we are upgrading services is Weights & Measures, which is perhaps our most visible and prominent. The certification stickers our Weights & Measures inspectors place on gasoline pumps and scales are evident throughout Alabama. We take this responsibility with the utmost seriousness, as it remains one of government’s most basic functions.

During the balance of this year, we are working to elevate the way we do our job for the people of Alabama. We appreciate your support during these difficult times.

NATIONAL AGRICULTURE DAY

National Agriculture Day is March 8th. Every year, producers, agriculture associations, corporations, universities, government agencies and countless others join together to recognize the contributions of agriculture. For more information, visit www.agday.org.

PRODUCT SPOTLIGHT

Salsa Señorita is a product of El Nuevo Foods, LLC, a Birmingham-based company that entered the marketplace in 2008.

Salsa Señorita sales outlets include independent food distributors and direct sales outlets, such as grocery stores, farmers markets, restaurants and catering companies. In addition, the product is sold online at www.salsaseñorita.com. Salsa Señorita is distributed in Alabama, California, Georgia and New Mexico.

The company was established and is managed by Mark Coffman and Lori Sours, brother and sister, who grew up in New Mexico making Salsa Señorita. It was created in a New Mexico kitchen.

Salsa Señorita uses fresh ingredients blended together to emphasize the individual characteristics of each ingredient. It is one of the few salsa with no tomato sauce, tomato puree or tomato paste. It also doesn't have any preservatives.

Salsa Señorita is available in four flavors: hot, medium, mild and roasted garlic.

For more information, you can contact owner Lori Sours at P.O. Box 130787, Birmingham, AL 35213, call 404-434-0865 or email info@elnuevofoods.com.

HYDROPONIC HORTICULTURE

The Mobile ARC has been a part of the Mobile community for over 50 years, providing services for people with developmental disabilities. One of its most successful programs is its job training programs, located at Congress Street and in Irvington.

The Irvington location has had a horticulture program for many years. When Mobile ARC talked of expanding the program, those in the organization wanted to make a progression into a more unique field of growing. Up to that point in time, Mobile ARC had only been growing ornamental plants. With the expansion, the organization chose to pursue hydroponic growing because it provided an opportunity to expand into a field that is uncommon in the Mobile area, and would provide crops that could be grown year round.

In 2009, Mobile ARC opened the Green MARC, its hydroponic greenhouse. It began growing Bibb lettuce, but has now expanded to Red Romaine and Microgreens, as well. In addition, Mobile ARC also grows other specialty foods like Japanese Eggplants, Korean Peppers and Broccolini, a small broccoli, but these specialty foods are grown traditionally.

This year, Mobile ARC is expanding its planting even more to include new items like Szechuan Button, Nasturtiums, Borage Flowers, Dulce Buttons, Tokyo Turnips and Thumbilina Carrots.

Mobile ARC sells their products to many restaurants and grocery stores in Baldwin and Mobile counties. These partners in the community also have been essential in guiding Mobile ARC in its choice of products to grow.

Mobile ARC's main goal is to provide job opportunities and job training for people with disabilities. Finding a product that was in demand and could provide those jobs all year long came in the form of hydroponic lettuce. Now Mobile ARC is the only hydroponic greenhouse in its area that can provide fresh products grown without the use of pesticides to the local

U.S. FARM EXPORTS SET RECORD IN 2011

According to U.S. Department of Agriculture officials, the nation's farm exports reached a record $136.3 billion last year, rising $20.5 billion over the previous record set in 2010. Exports grew by both volume and value.

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said the exports show that American agriculture remains a bright spot in the nation's economy.

"These figures indicate how demand for the American brand of agriculture continues to soar worldwide, supporting good jobs for Americans across a variety of industries, such as transportation, renewable energy, manufacturing, food services and on-farm employment," Vilsack said. "During the past three years, the U.S. farm sector has continued to support and create jobs on a consistent basis, strengthening an American economy that's built to last. Every $1 billion in agricultural exports supports 8,400 American jobs, meaning that U.S. farm exports helped support more than 1 million U.S. jobs in 2011."

Grains were the biggest contributor to the overall record, reaching an all-time high of $37.7 billion, a $9.2 billion increase over 2010.

Tom Vilsack

Cotton experienced the biggest year-to-year increase, up 44 percent from 2010, reaching a record $8.5 billion. Dairy and pork exports also set records in 2011, reaching $4.8 billion and $6 billion respectively.

"Another success story is U.S. beef exports," Vilsack said. "Last year, the United States exported an all-time high of $5.4 billion worth of beef and beef products, surpassing the previous record by more than $1.6 billion."

Vilsack credited American agriculture's innovation and use of the latest technology for achieving a nearly unparalleled level of productivity.
